1. From 26 February to 15 March 1951, there was intensive day and night flying at Neuruppin (N 53/Z 49) airfield. The jet fighters would taxi from their parking area to the take-off point in front of the destroyed hangars. Having landed at the field, the planes were towed to the dispersal area by a weapons carrier. Formation flying in groups of four planes was practiced.

2. On 14 March, an estimated 800 EM were stationed at the field. Twenty-four jet aircraft and four P-51s were counted at the field. *

3. After 9 March, searchlights mounted on trucks were seen at the field. Truck [REDACTED] with a mounted searchlight was parked at the cemetery. Two trucks with mounted searchlights, [REDACTED] were seen in the southern section of the runway.  These last two searchlights illuminated the sky over the airfield during the night. There was a box-like wooden frame between the two searchlights, the purpose of which was not known.

4. [REDACTED]

All of the trucks had a black plate with the Russian inscription "Driving School" in white letters fitted on the driver's cab and the rear.

* Comment. The type and number of aircraft confirms that the airfield is occupied by one fighter regiment. This regiment is believed to be equipped with about 30 MiG-15s. This number was mounted when the fighter regiment arrived at Neuruppin.
